Cheetah are being reintroduced to this majestic wetland system, where lechwe and other prey abound.

Bangweulu Wetlands

As the first reintroduction site into Southern Africa in 2017, this population continues to grow as a stronghold for cheetah conservation in the region.

Liwonde National Park

Cheetah introduced to Liwonde were used to found this population in 2019 and it continues to thrive.

Majete Wildlife Reserve

Matusadona National Park

This landscape represents a potential 'safe space' for cheetah.

This unique isolated landscape is still home to cheetah and could play an important role in their regional conservation.

Iona National Park

Remaining free-roaming cheetah range

The remaining range for free-roaming cheetah in South Africa runs along the borders of Namibia, Botswana, Zimbabwe and Mozambique. This population continues to survive in a hostile landscape fraught with man-made dangers.
